

brilliant LIGHT

lighting workshop
with NICK FANCHER & CHRIS KEELS

Introduction

Small Flash

It isn't a dirty word. Nor is it simply a cheap alternative to studio strobes. Quite often, small, cordless flashes can prove to be the better tool for the job. This workshop will explore the range of what you can achieve using speedlites. You will learn everything from simple one-light and two-light setups, to how to shoot off-camera flash without a wireless trigger.

Itinerary

Small Flash Overview

One-Light Portrait

Two-Light Portrait

Two-Light: White Seamless

No Remote? No Problem.

Action Lighting: photojournalist style

Colored Gels: Blending and Separating

Models Arrive / Open Shooting

Judging and Group Critique (awards provided by Midwest Photo Exchange)

photo by Patrick Crawford

Nick Fancher

Nick Fancher began his photography education in high school in 1997. He attended Ft. Hayes High School's career center for Commercial Photography. He graduated from The Ohio State University in 2005 with a BFA in fine art photography. In 2007 he founded Shutter-Think Photography, LLC, specializing in portrait and fine art photography. His work has been featured in the international publications Photo District News (PDN) and JPG magazines as well as locally in C Magazine and Columbus Alive. His wedding work has received awards from the Wedding Photojournalist Association (WPJA) as well as Bride Magazine and PDN. His art has been featured in ROYGBIV and BoMA galleries.

photo by Nick Fancher

Chris Keels

A professional photographer for ten years, Chris Keels has provided environmental portraiture and lifestyle advertising photography for clients like The Ohio State University, Capital Law School, NBC 4, The CW and Abbot Labs. His approach to lighting is summed up in the phrase quality over quantity blending both available light and essential strobe lighting techniques to create natural and compelling imagery.

Chris Keels currently maintains Keels Photography, a portrait and wedding studio in Grandview. Keels Photography was voted Best in Columbus Wedding Photography by Columbus Monthly in 2007.